A 2015 amendment to the California Voting Rights Act requires that all district-based entities, including community college districts, provide equal representation to their constituents through the elimination of “at large” districts. Additionally, district board members should reflect the demographics in their region to ensure that boards accurately represent their constituents and respond to their population’s needs.

Currently, over half of community college districts may be out of compliance. In order to meet the law’s requirements, districts must redraw their lines or restructure their regions to reflect their changing demographics and ensure one representative for each region. The Foundation for California Community Colleges is partnering with Redistricting Partners to help community college districts in their redistricting efforts by providing the back-office support and expertise districts need to restructure.
